Eight bays in similar style, with diaper work and mullioned and transomed windows. Three projecting two storey square bays with paired cross windows to each floor and cross windows in the return wall. Flight of balustraded stone steps in the angle with the main building. The stable block forms an L-range with the Service wing. Dated 1664. Two storeys. East elevation has a broad round-headed quoined carriage arch, with clock face above in ashlar surround. Cupola bell turret above. Similar entrance to left and between them a doorway with stone surround flanked by 3-light mullioned windows. To the right of the central arch a 2-light window, a single light window, a doorway with stone surround and segmental pediment, a single light window, a doorway with stone surround and a single light window. Two and three-light windows above and a segmental arched opening. The interior of the house was begun in 1670 and completed in 1691. Small alterations in C18 and C19 and restoration 1969-71 by John Fowler. The main entrance leads into a passage opening into the great hall, the passage was divided from the hall by Salvin in c1850. Salvin copied the elaborate rusticated doorway from the west end of the hall. Broad bolection moulded chimneypiece with coved acanthus cornice, matching the cornice to the room. Staircase hall, the Great Staircase (c1676) with white-painted balustrade with luxuriantly carved foliage by Edward Pierce, one of the finest staircases of its date in the country. Rich plaster ceiling by James Pettifer (1675) with paintings by Laguerre (1691). Carved doorway to the Saloon attributed to Thomas Young. The Saloon has a plaster ceiling by Bradbury and Pettifer (1675) with a shallow dome painted by Laguerre. Carved panelling of 1678 by Edward Pierce, altered c1736-41 to take the portraits and painted in the C19. Mid-Victorian marble | | |

| | | chimneypiece. The drawing room and library were made into one by Salvin c1853 and re-converted to two in 1969. The drawing room has a ceiling by Bradbury and Pettifer with an early C18 painting on canvas. Sumptuous naturalistic carved overmantel by Grinling Gibbons. Library ceiling by Mansfield (1672) with coved cornice similar to that in the hall. Mansfield might have only executed the cornice, as the ceiling is in the style of Bradbury and Pettifer and may have been added slightly later. Bookcases of c1700 with fluted pilasters and modillion cornice. Upstairs the Queens Room with plasterwork by Mansfield and alabaster chimneypiece and overmantel by Sir William Wilson (1670). Filling the full length of the South front is the Long Gallery, a very conservative feature for its date (completed in 1676). Magnificent ceiling by Robert Bradbury and plain panelling painted in the C19. Upper Library fitted out c1840's. Attic rooms have some plain panelling and the cupola has a circular staircase with barleysugar balusters and a moulded plaster ceiling. Smaller rooms on the east side of the house with plain raised and fielded panelling and various alterations by E. M. Barry who worked on the house between 1869-72 and designed the Secondary Staircase of robust proportions, with a ramped hand-rail. George Devey worked on the house between c1872-80. His east wing has few interior features of special interest and has been converted into a Museum of Childhood. Billiard room with early C20 plasterwork, incomplete, probably by W Romaine-Walker. The stable block with massive double purlin roof is also part of the museum. Sources. Country Life June 15, 22 and 29, 1935, articles by Christopher Hussey.
